Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

This application currently names joint inventors. In considering patentability of the claims under 35 U.S.C. 103(a), the examiner presumes that the subject matter of the various claims was commonly owned at the time any inventions covered therein were made absent any evidence to the contrary. Applicant is advised of the obligation under 37 CFR 1.56 to point out the inventor and invention dates of each claim that was not commonly owned at the time a later invention was made in order for the examiner to consider the applicability of 35 U.S.C. 103(c) and potential 35 U.S.C. 102(e), (f) or (g) prior art under 35 U.S.C. 103(a).

Claims 7-12 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Darnall et al (US 4,992,207). The claims are directed to a biodegradable trace metal binding system that effectively delivers chromium, cobalt, copper, iron, manganese, molybdenum, selenium and zinc to animals, within foodstuffs.

Darnall teaches a method for the selective extraction of certain metal ions, such as silver, platinum, gold, mercury (Abstract), chromium, copper, zinc, cobalt or selenium (column 4, lines 8-11), from aqueous solutions containing these ions. A wide variety of microorganisms such as Thiobacillus and Chlamydomonas, have the ability to bind these metals to their cell surfaces (column 3, lines 61-66). Particularly favored microorganisms for use in the disclosed procedure are unicellular algae, both green and blue-green (column 4, lines 47-49) because they are very simple and inexpensive to grow.

The prior art does not expressly teach the claimed species of Chlamydomonas reinhardtii, however, the art discloses that because the ability of a particular metal to bind at a specific pH appears to be a function of pH-metal interaction rather than a function of the type of cell used. Therefore, one of ordinary skill in the art would be motivated to utilize various strains of the genus Chlamydomonas with the expectation that any microorganism capable of binding metals may be used in the process, thus allowing the maintenance of an inexpensive process.

The prior art reference does not expressly teach that the metal-bound protein be admixed into animal foodstuff. However, the art discloses that these metal-bound substances have applications in areas such as water treatment and mineral processing (column 7, lines 51-54). Therefore, it would be obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to apply these materials to various substances, thus optimizing the nutritional intake of the animal.

Allowable Subject Matter

Claims 1-6 and 13 are allowed. The closest prior art fails to teach a metal-bound adduct of transgenic algal cells bound with at least one metal, admixed into animal foodstuffs.

Conclusion

No claims are allowed at this time.
